Retraction.

In the issue of The Sun of July 23, 1931, a news item taken from the Edmonton
Journal contained the sentence that Daniel Brox had called Ellsworth C. McLaughlin a thief, rogue and a liar, as well as stating that he should be in jail; and that Mr McLaughlin was suing Dan Brox for $950 for slander.

The Statement of Claim issued on Mr McLaughlin's behalf does not bear out this version of the case; as the words complained of by Mr McLaughlin, and alleged to have been used by Mr Brox to Mr McLaughlin, are: "Your nearest neighbor says you are a thief, a rogue and a liar."

The Sun regrets that any harm or inconvenience were caused Mr Dan Brox by reason of the incorrect report published in The Sun on July lin against Mr Dan Brox.

Cures For Depression

Among the thousand and one articles, speeches and interviews to which the people have been treated on the all-pervading subject of the existing economic and financial depression, there has at last appeared one courageous individual who preaches the rather unpopular doctrine that continued depression might be a good thing for the country.

The man advancing this opinion is George Richardson, newly-elected president of the National (United States) Association of Purchasing Agents, which organization, it is stated, represents the material buying power of the big republic to the south. Mr. Richardson takes a sharp rap at the professional optimist and the nostrum specialist in a special message to the members of his organization in the course of which he says:

"We are now in the second year of a corrective period, which in the judgment of many of us is a wholesome and much needed reminder that there are basic economic, as well as moral, laws which do not change with the seasons, and are not affected by mob psychology; and, when flagrant disregard for these laws attains the proportions witnessed prior to the close of 1929, the measure of retribution which is meted out to us is in proportion to the extent of their breach." Then follows his declaration that "it might as well be beneficial in establishing a sound foundation for permanent recovery to have this period of fast and abstinence continue for awhile. There is no substitute for intelligence, hard work and close application to business."

Mr. Richardson, who thinks constantly in terms of buying rather than selling, finds that "business men need to have it borne in on them that they cannot get and hold something for nothing," and that "a return to hard work and a less extravagant living" are the only possible antidotes to "existing unsound tendencies which are manifest on every hand."

Contrasted with this statement of hard work and less extravagant living, which latter means less spending, is the view expressed by a writer in a well known Canadian financial paper. He says: "It has been stated that the solution of the present depression is hard work, economy and thrift. This has a nice sound but, unfortunately, the people who advance it do not clearly appreciate what the true effect of their recommendation would be. Hard work means producing and putting on sale a large quantity of commodities as we did in 1928. Economy and thrift mean spending as little as we can of our annual income and saving the rest. Doubtless by strict economy we could live on three billion dollars and save one billion of the four billion production in 1928. But if a four billion dollar production is put on sale and we offer only three billions for it, prices must be lowered and the producers accept a loss of one billion dollars. Then as only three billions were received, the producers will be forced to reduce wages and the opportunities for employment it can offer in the future by one billion dollars. Thus economy and thrift create the conditions that precipitate a depression."

Now, in our humble opinion, there is something to be said for both these points of view. Hard work we consider essential in this world. Extravagance should be curbed, and by extravagance we mean expenditures on non-essentials, or even on essentials beyond the ability of the buyer to pay for, and consequent running into debt. Thrift, not miserly hoarding, is wise and necessary, but it should not be carried to the extreme of denying one-self necessities, reasonable pleasures, and on what may be termed luxuries. Protection against old age, possible sickness, and an ultimate loss of earning capacity; in a word, assurance of a future competence is all that is required. The trouble is, and prior to the close of 1929 it became widespread, that thousands of people do aim to get and hold something for nothing. It simply cannot be done. We must pay for what we get. Speculation ran riot; hundreds of thousands of people bought on the instalment plan beyond their ability to pay. The inevitable crash followed, and the depression was upon us.

There is a happy medium between the extremes of spending one hundred cents of every dollar earned, even going into debt beyond one's ability to pay, and miserly living in fear of the future and hoarding every possible dollar. That happy medium is (1) living within one's income; (2) small but regular savings, and these not merely hoarded but wisely invested in order that they may be available to expand industry, create employment, in a word, perform their proper function in the world; (3) expand one's expenditures in keeping with increase of income. In other words, every one's dollars should be kept busy.

To illustrate: Industry (and we include agriculture) produces. It pays for raw materials, wages, transportation, distribution, etc. The wage-earners, in turn, buy the goods and foodstuffs thus produced. Thus the money paid out in wages returns to industry, to again be paid out in wages, to again return to industry. The more frequently a dollar is thus turned over, the greater the production, the larger the total of wages paid, the greater the business turnover of the nation; hence the greater the prosperity, and the absence of a depression.

This, we believe, is sound economics and good finance. It is, however, necessary to add that while the above observations apply to industry generally, including agriculture, there are seasonal conditions, such as the present widespread crop failure, which cannot be overcome even by the hardest of hard work, the strictest economy and thrift. These exceptional conditions must be met by exceptional remedies. They are, however, exceptions which do not nullify the truth and strength of the general policy to which expression has been given.

Could Not Check the Summer Complaint A Few Doses Did It

Mrs. B. Coulter, 918-11th Ave. E., Calgary, Alta., writes: "Last summer my youngest son was very bad with summer complaint, and everything he ate he would vomit, and he got so thin I became very much worried. I could not get the discharges checked, so I went to the drugstore and he gave me a bottle of Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry and told me it would stop the trouble if anything would. As I had given the boy the first few doses I noticed the discharges were being checked, and he was not long before he was well again."

Cruise Was Successful

Dr. Eckener Satisfied With Zeppelin Trip To Arctic

Home from the top of the world after a week's cruise, the Graf Zeppelin landed at Friedrichshafen, Germany, amid lusty cheers of thousands who flocked to the airfield instead of going to work.

"It was a splendid and highly successful cruise," Dr. Eckener said. "Some people may have thought we were out in a dreadful region of ice and extreme cold, but from the very beginning we never doubted for a moment that this would be a relatively easy trip. Often we enjoyed skies of Italian blue and we never were bothered by the discomforts of the Arctic."

"Many people thought we did not accomplish all we set out to do, but perhaps we did not mean to do all that some papers said we intended. I hope this cruise will have a two-fold result, namely, that we may soon make another journey to the Arctic when we can get the necessary funds together, and that the Graf Zeppelin will become a favourite with tourists who feel the call of the north."

How To Read a Book

Lord Macaulay said: "When a boy, I began to read very earnestly, but at the foot of every page I read I stopped and obliged myself to give an account of what I had read on that page. At first I had to read it three or four times before I got my mind firmly fixed. But I compelled myself to comply with the plan, until now, after I have read a book through once, I can almost recite it from the beginning to the end."

Long Journey On Skis

Major Scott Crossed 500 Miles Of Arctic Ice

Major James M. Scott, member of the British Aero-Arctic expedition to Greenland, arrived at Igloot, July 20, after having crossed the inland ice on skis from Lemon Rose camp, Angmagssalik Fjord.

The British Expedition to Greenland, which has been there a year, is obtaining data for use in mapping an air route from England to Canada.

Major Scott left Lemon Rose camp July 1 on the journey across the ice to Igloot, a distance of almost 500 miles.

Does Away With Guesswork

New Device Is X-Ray and Radium Meter

The "X-Ray Yardstick," a device to make use of X-rays and radium safer, was adopted by the Third International Congress on Radiology at Paris.

The device is a portable machine which measures the "dosage" of X-rays accurately. It is an X-ray and radium meter. Its adoption means that for the first time there is a standard unit for use in all countries in measuring short-wave radiation.

The importance of this agreement lies in the destructive powers of X-ray and radium, an overdose being as bad as too little, and occasionally even fatal. The difficulty with X-rays has been worse than with radium because the intensity of radiation varies greatly with differences in the numerous varieties of X-ray tubes. There has been necessarily much guesswork, and also sometimes confusion among radiologists in one nation about applying the progress of their fellow workers in another part of the world.

The meter was developed by Dr. Lauriston H. Taylor, of the United States Bureau of Standards.

The Prince Of Wales Greets Delegates To The Congress Of Universities Of The Empire

The Prince of Wales greeting to the delegates to the Congress of Universities of the Empire in the Guildhall, London, England, recently was a Royal welcome in more than one sense and it was received with evidence of hearty approval. His Royal Highness began his address as president of the congress (which held its business meetings in Edinburgh, Scotland, a few days later) by reading a message which he had sent the King and His Majesty's reply thereto, the one loyalty and devotion and the other expressing pleasure and welcoming the delegates, especially those from overseas.

The Prince recalled the fact that the eight universities of a century ago had become 53 by the time the first congress met, and the delegates now assembled or assembling come from 70 different universities. Nearly 90 of them have crossed the seas to attend the congress.

The core of the Prince's subject was the need of educated men to-day, not only to fill high official posts everywhere in the British Empire, but to serve our commerce and industry—vital needs at home and abroad. In a special word of welcome to the overseas visitors he spoke of the "other and better ties," among them the universities, which, he liked to think, were displacing those more material links now fast disappearing, which had bound the empire together in the past.

"With the growth of our population, our commerce, and our national wealth has grown the need for advanced education, until nearly every great city possesses its university," His Royal Highness said. "At the same time, the duties and responsibilities of universities have increased in equal measure. The need of men today is greater than ever. Year by year as the scope of our activities increases, men are called for in every part of the empire, not only to fill the higher offices, the services, and the government and municipal administrations, but to carry on the commerce and industry which are vital to our existence."

"I particularly welcome the presence of so many delegates from overseas, because the old concrete ties which joined our empire together in the past are fast disappearing, and I like to think that they are being replaced by other and better ties, which, though less formal, less tangible, in Burke's words, 'though light as air as strong as links of iron.' Among those links surely there can be none stronger or sounder than the universities of the empire. We have a common history and to a great extent community of race and language, of tradition and of interests. The congress adds the advantage of personal contact and enables us to meet together in social and intellectual intercourse, and to talk over the common problems which beset us all. In word, it gives us an opportunity of co-operation which is quite as valuable an education as it is, to my mind, in most of the other phases of our lives. And it seems to me that you have it in your power not only to contribute to the solution of educational problems, but to strengthen the organization and to draw closer the finest ties of empire."

The tiger will not eat an animal not killed by himself.

Lamps Of The Ages

Museum At Munich, Germany, Has Most Interesting Collection
The German museum at Munich has added an interesting feature to its exhibits in the shape of a collection of street lamps. The collection starts with the first street light used in Paris, a pitch basket. The oil light is represented by an old rapped oil lamp. The third, a gas light with five flames, was used in London in 1816. The collection includes lights up to the most modern incandescent lamps.

Might Let Them Try

Question Is Would Women Rule Country Better Than Men

Somebody in Portland suggested the other day that, since men had made such a hash of running the country, it was about time to give the women a chance.

Somebody else replied that women had a majority of the votes already and, if they wanted to run the country, they could do it. He (yes, of course, he was a man) said that women were quite content with "their place in the home."

Then the war began. Letters to the editor, pro and con, filled the columns of the papers.

One woman said that if her sex were running the country they would at least not let people starve. She was probably right. That's just the sort of thing a woman would think of first.

It's the sort of thing that Mary Ellen Smith, Agnes MacPhail, Nancy Astor, Margaret Bondfield and their sister parliamentarians keep harping on, to the annoyance of their male men colleagues.

Should women rule? There have been some extraordinarily capable women monarchs, Elizabeth, Victoria, Catherine the Great and others. But they had male advisers. The women have never had a complete innings of their own.

Would Canada be a better country if the House of Commons had 244 Agnes MacPhails and only one Bachelor Bennett raising a feeble voice for his sex from the back benches? Would a city council, all women, make a better job of running Vancouver?—Vancouver Sun.

Reach Remarkable Age

Triplets, 90 Years Old, Live On Three Continents

Exceeding the proverbial three score and ten by an additional 20 years, Charles Mayhew, the eldest by three-quarters of an hour of boy triplets, is shortly to celebrate his 90th birthday. Mayhew's two brothers live in Canada and Australia, thus making the veteran triplet combination an empire-grown product.

Charles Mayhew lives in the King's Cross district of London, England, and was formerly Charles Dickens' shoemaker. Mayhew says that in Dickens' "Our Mutual Friend" there is a picture of him at his work.

The finish of the Russian war is named by Mayhew as the most glorious day of his life. St. Paul's was lit up in celebration of the occasion; the whole shape of the cathedral, was there in gaslight. Mayhew sang at the funeral of the Duke of Wellington. As a boy he sang at St. Clement Dances.

Mayhew worked at his trade until he was 86. He eats, as he puts it himself, "everything that comes to hand." He has a standing challenge open to any man over 70 to walk to Cambridge, a distance of about fifty miles. Mayhew will use a pair of shoes made at his own bench. He expects to see his 110th birthday in good health.

The March Of Grasshoppers Which Ravage The Countryside Is One Of Nature's Mysteries

J. V. McAree, in Mail and Empire: Not living in Nebraska which is being ravaged by a plague of grasshoppers which has already done millions of dollars worth of damage, one can view the thing as a phenomenon rather than as a calamity. The stories from Nebraska tell of trees, grass, clothing and even posts being devoured by the myriads of insects as they pursue their unpredictable path for ends that remain wrapped in mystery. It is a common notion that grasshoppers swarm over a countryside in search of food. This is no more true than it is true that the occasional migration of the lemmings are occasioned by a sudden and uncontrollable desire to have a swim. The death of the lemmings in the ocean, and the destruction of the crops in the path of the grasshoppers seem to be mere incidents to a deeper mystery which perhaps is connected with the migration of birds which science has yet been unable to explain. Perhaps it is the same urge in the golden plover, the Arctic tern, the little redstart of Scandinavia and the grasshopper in Nebraska. One may be observed as a beautiful phenomenon, while the other may be a natural disaster comparable to an earthquake or the eruption of a volcano.

Some months ago there was an article on Asia by R. W. G. Hingston, the famous English explorer, who has observed grasshoppers in flight on or near the coast in different quarters of the world. Major Hingston says: "Their wanderings have no relation to food. They do not pick out the luxuriant places; the arid soil appears to suit them every bit as well as does the greenest tract. They march past places rich in food, scarcely heeding them beyond nibbling a little, and on to barrenness once more. Indeed when actively on the march they will not stop even to nibble if they come upon some huddled patch." It is by day that the hoppers show activity. When night falls they halt and spend the hours of darkness either upon the plants they happen to have lit upon or under stones or clods. When it becomes light again they begin to stir, and soon are once more on the march. This observer has calculated that they advance a mile in about three hours. They travel alternately by creeping or jumping, all headed in the same direction.

If one regards the main body as an advancing lake of colour, he will find parallel with it several other lesser bodies like streams. These are made up of grasshoppers, too, moving in the same direction as the chief host. On the march they not only do not appear to be on the lookout for fresh pastures, but they indulge cannibalistic practices which are not observed at other times. If one of them is injured the others will immediately attack it, drawing from the body whatever juices it may contain. Major Hingston, struck with the fact that no matter how isolated from the mass some of the hoppers might become, they still maintained their sense of direction, caught a few and whirled them round in a tin box, thinking that they might be disorientated. But as soon as they were turned loose, they resumed their old course, faithful as the needle to the pole. Can these swarms have any connection with the metamorphosis which the insects undergo? The fact that they occur before the final moult is interesting.

A locust moults five times, and it is only with the final moult that its wings are capable of bearing it through the air. Before they develop it remains a hopper. Then it advances a stage and its wings are suitable for carrying it forward, for short distances on the principle of a glider. Presently they become strong and it can soar in the air. Usually in a swarm advance, it will be seen, if kept under observation, that the flying insects keep on increasing, so that a body which set forth composed exclusively of the young of the species is destined as a winged host. This is one of the most thrilling sights of nature. This immense army whose numbers must be reckoned in the thousands of millions literally fills the sky. Its progress is furious for while the insects seem to be headed in one direction they really advance at right angles to it. The depth of the swarm can only be guessed at but it may be two miles thick, and because of different air currents the various strata are often seen to advance at different rates of speed.

Sometimes the whole mass will be seen suddenly to change its direction as though upon a common impulse. Stragglers reaching the same spot hour after hour will also turn as though a guide post had been left for them. For centuries mankind has been trying to cope with the locust plague, and in recent years with the invention of poison gases and flame throwers have met with more success than for thousands of years earlier. The time to attack the insects is before they have sprouted their wings. Trenches can be dug in their line of march, and the insects destroyed as they tumble into them. Efforts to exterminate them by digging up the ground in which their eggs are laid have met with only partial success. Once they have finished their fifth moult and have taken to wing they are impossible to deal with, and the only hope is that they may take their way out to sea like the lemmings and return no more.

Victory For the Small

Word comes from London that the creature which its known the world over for its sluggishness—the snail—has won a victory over the world's fastest vehicle—the airplane. The British Royal Air Force field at Lake Habbaniya, near Bagdad, recently became overrun with countless snails. After all other means had been tried to get rid of the creatures, the Royal Air Force had to pack up, bag and baggage, including flying machines and all equipment, and move to another base.

SOWING AND REAPING — TEMPERANCE LESSON

Golden Text: "Be not deceived; God is not mocked; for whatsoever a man soweth that shall he also reap."

Galatians 6:7.

Lesson: Galatians 6:1-10.

Devotional Reading: Isaiah 53:1-15.

Explanations and Comments

Deal Gently With Another's Trespass, verse 1. "Brethren," wrote Paul to the Galatians, "if a man be caught in a sin, do you who profess the spirit of Christ set him right; correct him, and bring him back to right actions. The Greek verb means 'bring the man into his place.' It is a metaphor taken from a dislocated man brought back by a skillful surgeon into his true position.

"We are to be experts in re-setting broken wills, and in repairing broken hearts in mending broken lives. And there is far more work than we have doctors, and so the fallen are becoming the hopeless and the dying."

Restore such a one in the spirit of gentleness, for the man who has suddenly fallen into sin is not a hardened sinner, and should be dealt with leniently, and remember that under similar temptation you also might yield and need a similar forgiveness.

"There is no sin which any man hath done, but another man may do the same,"—Augustine.

Share Another's Burdens, verse 2. "Bear ye one another's burdens. Another's weakness, his yielding to temptation, his sorrow and remorse, may be his burden. Sympathetically share his cares and his sorrows. By obeying this exhortation you will be fulfilling the law of Christ, for Christ's law is love (see Matthew 8:17).

Avoid Self-Deception, verse 3.—The connection of this verse with the preceding one is evidently that one who refuses to bear another's burden does so from a mistaken notion, from a false idea that he is somebody too exalted to stoop to another's burden. Yet in the sight of God he is only a sounding brass and tinkling cymbal, he deceiveth himself.

Do Not Test Your Conscience By That Of Others, verse 4.—Let each man test his own conduct by the example of Christ, and then, if he stand the test he may rejoice because of his own merit and not because he is better than his neighbor. He should not take others as a standard, and rejoice because he is better than some. Recall the words of the apostle Paul, "I thank thee, O Lord, I thank thee, for thou art not as other men, and compare with it Paul's glorying, 'By the grace of God I am what I am.'"

The Law Of Harvest, verses 7, 8.—Be not deceived, God is not mocked, as they seemed to think they can mock him who expect to escape the consequences of their actions. "God cannot be treated with contempt without provoking His righteous punishment."—Philip Schaff.

For whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap." This is God's law of the spiritual harvest.

"Wild oats take something out of the soil of a man's life that no system of crop rotation can restore" (The Youth's Companion).

We usually think of this verse as referring to retribution for wrongdoing, but the happier meaning is equally true that "he who sows what reaps what, not tares."

"Life's fields will yield—as we make a harvest of thorns or of flowers."

—Alice Cary.

Verse eight is a particular example coming under the general truth expressed in the preceding verse. The "field" is here thought of as the evil nature. "He that tills the field of the carnal life," shall reap a harvest doomed to perish, but he who tills the field of the spiritual life shall reap eternal life. "The heart sows into the Spirit whenever in thought or deed his prompting is obeyed and his will made the law of life."—G. S. Findlay.

To Combat Tuberculosis

Remarkable Recoveries Reported From Use Of Native Remedy

Should the announcement be made that a positive cure had been discovered for that dread scourge tuberculosis, and should the claim be substantiated, it would be a revelation of the greatest importance to the world. Recently there has come to the hands of the writer a most remarkable book entitled "Tuberculosis, Its Treatment and Cure With the Help Of Umckaloabo." The author of this book is a well-known English physician, and the publishers are B. Fraser & Co., 62 Pepsy Road, Tottenham, Park, London, S.W. The author who has been responsible for several previous medical works, candidly sets forth the fact that he was quite sceptical regarding the merits of Umckaloabo when it was first drawn to his attention. "Medical men are very conservative about new treatment, and rightly so," says the author. "A year ago I was as profound a sceptic as to the existence of a remedy or cure for consumption, outside the orthodox methods which consist of rest, diet, and open-air treatment, as any of my professional colleagues throughout the country."

In 1897, a young English engineer, living in Birmingham, contracted tuberculosis, and was advised by his physician to go to South Africa. This he did, and during his sojourn there was induced by a native medicine man to try a preparation made from the root of a native plant, known locally as Umckaloabo. To his great surprise he found that at once began to improve, and very soon his health and strength had completely returned. Major Stevens, the man in question, and who by the way, served with distinction during the Boer War, had as a result of the trouble which he suffered from thirty-one years ago, the author investigated this case, but needed further corroborative evidence before becoming fully convinced of the merits of the treatment. He accordingly personally investigated over fifty other cases and was finally forced to accept the genuineness of the discovery in the face of the large number of remarkable recoveries. He mentions the fact that a doctor of Geneva, Switzerland, has treated some 750 cases with Umckaloabo during the past ten years, and claims to have cured the great majority.

Among the fifty odd cases investigated, the author mentions that of a man who in May, 1920, was certified by his local doctor to be suffering with pulmonary tuberculosis, and the diagnosis was confirmed by two other doctors in the neighbourhood, so there was no possible doubt about the existence of the disease.

The symptoms were cough, expectoration, debility, loss of weight, and later on, when he had several haemorrhages. Following one of these he was removed to Brompton Hospital, and after a stay of several weeks, he was sent back to the Downs Sanatorium, where he remained for ten weeks, but appears to have made no progress, for in November of the same year he had a bad haemorrhage, he was 2 st. below his normal weight of 11 st., and the symptoms of the disease showed no signs of diminution. He discharged himself, because, as he says, he was getting no better; in fact, he felt he was going downhill, and was so bad that he had to be conveyed home in a cab.

At this juncture, November, 1920, he commenced to take Umckaloabo, having heard of it from a nurse, whose brother claimed to have been cured of tuberculosis by it. He was still losing weight, was very weak, and the symptoms were, in his opinion, more pronounced than they had ever been before.

The subsequent history was as follows: an improvement began to take place at once, which was commented upon by the doctor in attendance. Five weeks after commencing the treatment he had gained 1 st. in weight. In January 1921, his strength had increased, so that he was able to take fairly long walks, and the expectoration had diminished by one-half. By April, when examined at the Local Centre, his weight increased by a further 12 lbs. His steady improvement was maintained in the succeeding months, except for a short period when, being without the treatment, some of the symptoms showed a tendency to return.

Towards the end of June, 1921, he was still improving; his weight had increased to 11 st. 7 lbs., and the sputum, for the first time, was negative. Six months after commencing the treatment he was strong enough to take up work as a plasterer's labourer, and he continued at this

The ADVENTURES OF CAPTAIN JIMMU and his Dog SCOTTIE

WHAT CAME BEFORE—Captain Jimmu and his friend Lieut. Jed Stone, plan to rescue Guy Stone from the cruel Chinese bandits. They bargain with General Fu for his assistance, in exchange for flying him over to Japan.

We worked secretly on our plans for several days, changing it to look like a freewheeling dragon. The body, we covered with phosphorus paint which would glow green in the dark, while a long dragon tail was attached behind. We painted it with black marks on the wings, and wicked-looking claws sprang out under the head. Even in the daytime our plane looked horrible enough, but at night, it was any ignorant bandit's camp with fear.

Of course, that is just what we intended our plane to do. While the bandits held in terror, we would have a chance to rescue Guy Stone, the brother of Lieutenant Stone who had been held captive for many weeks.

Just for safety, we mounted a machine gun in front of our plane. If any Chinese dared to foot with a machine gun. As the sun sank toward the western horizon, we started our engine and the engine and we were heading full speed toward the camp where the bandits were. We timed our raid so we would arrive just after dark, while the bandits were still asleep.

Just as we passed over the contrived, the poor Chinese families hearing the drone of our motor, fled in terror. We did not heed their howls. Seeing our dragon glimmering in the sky, with its wings spread out, and long tail flying behind in the wind, they fled in terror, and buried their faces in their hands.

We followed the railway tracks, and soon we came to the ridge where we had planned to land. Just at that point, we discovered the trail into the mountains. The campfire of the bandit guards at the notch in the cliffs proved a welcome beacon for us. We were dark, every minute, and thunder rumbled in the distance. As we crept down, we saw the Chinese lanterns far below, and we crept down, and red campfires dotted the ground. Somewhere down in that pit of darkness was Guy, Jed Stone's younger brother. As we crept overhead, there flashed before my mind's eye a picture of the days when as boys together, we played on the old ranch out near Winnipeg.

Suddenly the bandits saw us. Panic broke loose in the camp. Black forms rushed about—tripped, fell and fought each other, frantic with fear. I switched on the landing lights and turned on the siren whistle. The sound wailed and echoed through the mountain pass. The landing on the ground, we roared down toward the tents. The entire force of bandits seemed to have deserted and taken to the forest. Then a dark form rushed toward the tents with a flaming brand. We fired a few rounds from the machine gun, and evidently winged him in the foot, for he dropped the brand, and slipped into the darkness.

"Hurry," cried the men, "we must search the tents before they are burned. Keep the motor running. I'll fly while I search. Use the machine gun if the bandits appear. Over the side of the mountain, I'll dash into the camp after dark, while the bandits are crack of rifles in the distance. In the heart of our camp, I'll wait. Scottie went the other way, but the range was wide. Then I heard Jed Stone open fire with his machine gun."

Fine Flying Record

Trip To Pay Treaty Money Made Over Difficult Country

Maintaining a fine record of perfect flying to schedule over most difficult country, the Indian treaty flight under the direction of the civil government air commander, Flight Lieutenant Dave Harding, has returned to Ottawa after spending 46 days in the wilds of northern Ontario and along the southern coasts of Hudson and James Bays.

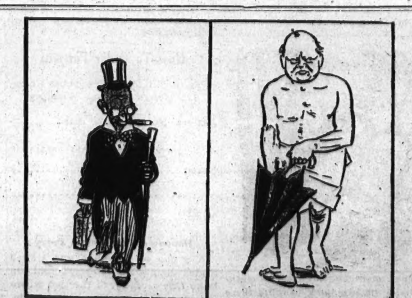

Approximately 4,500 Indians were paid in accordance with the treaty with the Dominion. Census of inhabitants of the wilds of northern Ontario was also taken.

On the flight from the mouth of the Severn River to Fort Albany and Moose Factory, great fields of ice were seen along the shores of Hudson Bay. At the mouth of every river emptying into the bay large schools of porpoises were photographed.

A very marked tide was observed along this particular stretch of coast, drops off from six to eight feet at low tide making the coast extremely dangerous in that the shore is low lying. When the tide ebbs, vast stretches of ood muck are uncovered for as much as 10 miles to sea, it was said.

AGREEMENT IS REACHED ON WHEAT POLICY

Ottawa, Ont.—Satisfactory arrangements have been made in connection with handling of the 1931 wheat crop. This was announced at the conclusion of the wheat conference between Premier R. B. Bennett and western representatives.

Discussions on financial arrangements for the handling of the 1931 wheat crop were attended by representatives of several banks, including the Royal and Bank of Commerce. The bank representatives sat in with the Prime Minister, Premier J. E. Brownlee, Alberta; Hon. Howard McConnell, Provincial Treasurer and Minister of Municipal Affairs for Saskatchewan; John J. McFarland, general manager of the selling agency of the wheat pool; President A. J. McPhail, of the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool and other prairie representatives. Following conclusion of the conversations, western government and wheat pool representatives left for the west.

Ottawa, Ont.—As a result of conferences between western wheat pools, the prairie governments and the Dominion, a revised wheat marketing policy has been agreed to. In addition to Federal guarantee of operations of the trading corporation which is to handle grain marketed through pool elevators, there will be a Federal guarantee of pooled wheat to the amount of 30 cents per bushel. In other words, the policy outlined in Premier Bennett's letter to the prairie governments will be carried through. But, in addition, the Dominion will guarantee any wheat that may be pooled to the extent of 30 cents initial payment per bushel. The position of the pool elevators this fall, therefore, will be this:

All pool farmers will be released from their pool contracts. They will be free to pool their wheat, free to sell it.

If they sell outright through the pool elevators, they will be paid the full market price. The transaction will be carried through by the new trading corporation. If the corporation makes any profit on the year's operation, such profit will be distributed among farmers. The trading corporation, while operating in an ordinary commercial way, will be a co-operative enterprise.

Indians Treated For Infantile Paralysis

Outbreak Of Disease At Fort George Has Been Checked

North Bay, Ont.—The outbreak of infantile paralysis among Indians at Fort George is well under control, according to word brought back from the settlement by Pilot Byrnes of the Royal Canadian Air Force. Byrnes landed his plane on Trout Lake near here after flying to the Indian Colony with a quantity of infantile paralysis serum.

Fort George is about 150 miles north of Moose Factory on the east shore of James Bay. The serum was rushed from Ottawa by aeroplane when word of the outbreak was received by the department of Indian Affairs. Byrnes flew to Moose Factory, picked up a physician, and then continued to Fort George.

The serum was administered immediately and it was expected by the doctor that danger of the malady spreading had been removed. Pilot Byrnes flew back to Ottawa.

Nautilus Proceeds Northward

Experts, However, Believe There Is Little Possibility Of Reaching Pole This Year

Bergen, Norway.—The Arctic submarine "Nautilus" left for Tromsø, Norway en route to Spitzbergen, but one member of the crew, sad and disheartened, remained behind. Sir Hubert Wilkins' American cook was replaced by a Norwegian. The cook disconsolately told interviewers that he had been dropped because he was getting so fat it would be difficult for him to escape over the ice in case of emergency.

Polar experts here said there was small possibility of Wilkins reaching the pole this year.

Winnipeg Bank Robbery

Manager Fires Five Shots, But Bandits Escape With Cash

Winnipeg, Man.—In a quiet residential district of Winnipeg bank bandits injected great excitement as they held up a branch of the Royal Bank of Canada, escaping with $1,000. The robbery occurred at the corner of Mountain Avenue and McGregor Street, in the north end of the city, the robbers gaining their freedom in a speeding automobile followed by five shots aimed at them by the manager of the bank.

Entering the establishment five minutes before closing time, the bandits forced the manager, E. L. Mundy, and teller, A. V. Monnin, into a back room.

One of the bandits thrust the cash into his pocket, then, with his companion, dashed for the door and into a waiting auto. As the holdup artists fled in the car, Manager Mundy grabbed his revolver from his desk and fired five shots, but none apparently struck their mark. A driver of a truck passing at the time, noticed the fleeing pair and gave chase, but the bandit car eluded the slow truck.

The robbers ripped the telephone cord at the bank before departing and police had to be called from a nearby store.

Message Of Hope

Hon. Frank Oliver Appeals For Highest Optimism Of Western People

Edmonton, Alberta.—A message of hope and faith in Canada's great northwest was left with the Edmonton Canadian Club by Hon. Frank Oliver, one of the pioneers of the west.

A subject close to his heart and with which, perhaps, none is better able to deal, Hon. Mr. Oliver dealt broadly with it and appealed for the highest optimism of western people throughout the trying readjustment now taking place.

On our west area; with our soil conditions that excel; with a climate that stimulates or indeed compels in large measure both mental and physical activity; with ocean ports open the year round; with the ideals of industry and thrift; of courage and endurance; of foresight; and enterprise firmly planted, may we not fairly look forward to this great northwest becoming in due course and in very truth the very heart of Canada?" asked Hon. Mr. Oliver in closing an address punctuated with warm applause.

Epidemic Under Control

Spread Of Anthrax In Eastern Manitoba Believed To Be Checked

Winnipeg, Man.—Dr. Alfred Savage, Chief Animal Pathologist for Manitoba, announced that the anthrax epidemic among horses in eastern Manitoba was under control and was confident the disease would not spread. Sixteen horses used in highway construction between Renelle, Man., and Ingolf, Ont., died during the brief epidemic which was rushed to the area.

Both Dominion and Provincial Government veterinarians and sanitary and contagious disease officials were camped in the Renelle district, though danger of the epidemic spreading was believed to be averted. The district was still closed to the public.

Lad Shoots Officer

Ten-Year-Old Boy, Caught In Robbery, Shoots Sheriff

Lasotin, Wash.—Sheriff John Wormell, 72, was shot and killed by a 10-year-old boy, who said he had been promised $2 and a trip to Canada for the robbery.

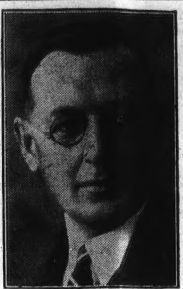

The boy, Hubert Nikolaus, Jr., was found robbing the Klaus Mercantile store, and was cornered by the sheriff. Deputy Wayne Ezema and Peter Klaus, owner of the store.

While the sheriff was searching the store, the deputy said, the boy, hidden behind a vinegar barrel, fired at him from a distance of five feet. The bullet pierced the officer's brain.

Young Nikolaus threw away his pistol and surrendered without resistance.

Unemployment Insurance

Preparing For Establishment Of Dominion-Wide System

Calgary, Alberta.—Collection of data is now under way in preparation for establishment of a Dominion-wide system of contributory unemployment insurance stated Dr. G. D. Stanley, M.P. for Calgary East, on his return to Calgary from Ottawa.

"The Federal Government aims to have the system in operation as soon as possible, but it will not be of much benefit in the alleviation of conditions due to the present economic depression," he said.

Dr. Stanley added that the Federal Government was gathering all information available, including the census data now being tabulated, and would base its system purely on ordinary principles adopted by insurance companies. Employees, employers and the government would contribute.

Germany Cuts Budget

Finance Minister Expects Economy In All Departments

Berlin, Germany.—Vice-Chancellor Hermann Dietrich, who also is Finance Minister, asserted that every criticism of extravagance in the German Federal Budget, made by S. Parker Gilbert while he was Agent-General for reparations payments has been met in the budget for 1931.

"We have cut the budget to the bone," said Dr. Dietrich, "we have gone through every department with the pruning knife, and now we can say that the 1931 budget really is one of drastic economy."

Preparing Relief Plans

Government Will Be Making Definite Announcement Shortly

Ottawa, Ont.—Highway construction will be concentrated upon throughout Canada as a means of taking care of single unemployed men. This intimation was given by Hon. G. D. Robertson, Minister of Labour in discussing the program of the government respecting unemployed relief. Preliminary conferences have already taken place with several of the provincial governments, Senator Robertson said, and within the next week or so a definite announcement may be expected as to the working out of the plan.

"The general view of the municipalities," he stated, "appears to be that they will be willing to redouble their efforts to find employment for married men providing the provinces and the Dominion provide work outside the cities for single men, particularly transients. Although the government's final decision has not been made, the probability is that highway construction will be carried on extensively to take care of men without family ties.

Until all the provinces have an opportunity to present their views, the Minister said, details on the plan, such as the amount provided for each province, nature of the construction camps to be set up and rates of wages to be paid, could not be indicated.

Will Visit West

Experts Will Study Needs Of Prairie Provinces For Farm Relief

Ottawa, Ont.—Studying the needs of the prairie provinces for farm relief, particularly Saskatchewan, a party of department officials, headed by Hon. Robert Weir, Minister of Agriculture, will leave for the west at once.

Mr. Weir will be accompanied by Prof. L. E. Kirk, newly appointed from Saskatchewan University to be Dominion Agrostologist; Dr. E. S. Archibald, director of the Dominion Experimental Farms, and J. G. Taggart, superintendent of the Experimental Farm at Swift Current.

No public meetings will be held during the visit of the department officials in the west. Instead they will visit the leading farmers in the dried out areas and discuss ways and means of aiding those in need of assistance.

It is thought that those men who, in more prosperous years, led the different communities in successful farming will be the most likely to give sound advice as to the most effective aid the governments can give.

Douglas, capital of the Isle of Man, has 1,000 less people than in 1921.

ROYAL VISITORS

Paying an extended visit to western Canada upon their return journey to their homeland, their Majesties King Prajadhipok and Queen Rambai Barni of Siam are travelling by special Canadian Pacific train to Vancouver, whence, after a short Vancouver Island cruise, they will sail on the "Empress of Canada," September 12th. In the pictures above are shown their Majesties and, below, the Banff Springs Hotel where they will reside for two weeks, during which time His Majesty will officially open the Banff Scottish Gathering.

CHINESE FLOODS TAKE HEAVY TOLL OF LIFE

Hankow, China.—Floods have rolled over 16 provinces of China and uncounted thousands were reported drowned. Hundreds of thousands were homeless, threatened by famine and disease.

All central China sent stories of distress and appeals for aid. Fifty million people, the Government's relief committee estimated, were afflicted, or soon would be, by the catastrophe.

China's great rivers, the Yangtze and the Yellow, fed by swollen tributaries after torrential rains, overflowed their banks and inundated wide expanses of country.

Many cities were food-swamped. Unable to bury their dead in submerged cemeteries, the Chinese allowed bodies to float downstream.

No tally of victims was possible but the Chinese press reported "several thousands" drowned in the sister cities of Hankow, Wuchang and Hangyang and their environs. Those cities, with total population of 1,300,000, including 1,200 white foreigners, were partly under water and fighting to keep back the Yangtze and Han rivers, which were pouring through broken dykes.

Nearly all of Hankow was flooded, but 200,000 refugees fled to higher places. Thirty thousands more were swamped daily by railway embankments and highways to join them. With pestilential conditions in refugee camps, it was feared disease would strike heavily.

Scores of small boats were sent to Wuchang in small boats, hoping for shelter and safety in the hills.

Never in modern times had the Yangtze reached such heights. Shipping was unable to proceed up-stream and cargoes could not be landed at docks.

Immigration Falls Off

Greatest Decrease Shown In Arrivals From Other Than Britain and U.S. Points

Ottawa, Ont.—Immigration to Canada during June showed a decrease of 85 per cent, compared with June a year ago, the figures being 3,169 and 13,717, respectively. According to a statement issued by Hon. Wesley A. Gordon, Minister of Immigration and Colonization, the total immigration to Canada in the three months, April 1 to June 30, 1931, has been 10,188, compared with 49,890 in the same three months a year ago.

The greatest decrease is shown in immigration other than that from the British Isles and the United States. The present small movement from continental Europe consists almost wholly of wives and minor children of Europeans already permanently settled in Canada.

Total immigration for the first three months of the present fiscal year, compared with the corresponding period a year ago consisted of British 3,816 compared with 16,587; United States, 4,807, compared with 9,510; other countries 1,555, compared with 23,791.

Aid For Western Churches

Support Fledged By United Church Of Canada

Toronto, Ont.—Financial support necessary to maintain 1,000 churches in Saskatchewan has been pledged by the United Church of Canada in meetings which concluded here. Gifts of clothing for needy people in the west were also promised.

The pledges followed a tour through the drought-stricken area of southern Saskatchewan by Dr. E. H. Oliver, of Saskatoon, moderator. Arrangements have been made for a conference between Dr. R. B. Cochrane, secretary of the Home Mission Board, and leaders of the Women's Missionary Society, in order to lay relief plans.

A resolution passed by the executive of the Home Mission Board declared that the board "up to the limit of its financial ability will endeavor to keep open all the churches in this area by making such grants as will enable them to carry on without hardship."

It was there that Simeon found her, coming in from the garden at a frantic summons from the maid, who had heard Gay's cry. The old man perceived the yellow envelope on the floor, and thought: "God help us! she has had bad news!"

Then he saw that it was unopened, and hastily tore at it with queerly fumbling hands. What he read caused him to drop on his knees beside Gay's pallid form, crying, as he tenderly chafed her hands: "Darlie, it's good news! He's safe! Wake up, Gay—wake up and let Uncle Sam tell you."

Nick's safe! Can't you hear, darlie? He's safe. Can't you hear Uncle Sam at it?"

It was the doctor who pushed Simeon aside. How he got there the old man didn't know. He said, his hand on Gay's pulse: "She's coming round, but we must get her to bed. This means mischief, I fear. It's lucky she was there when she fainted. If she'd had a fall—still, it's bad enough as it is; but when she knows the truth about that message it will give her a new lease of life, and seven-month babies sometimes turn out as husky as any others. I'll leave her here while I telephone the nurse, though she may not arrive in time. She's just off a case in Brattleboro."

He bent over the patient anxiously. Her eyes fluttered open—then closed. "Gay," he said gently, "wake up. Your husband's safe. He'll be here within a week. Gay."

She was looking at him now, but with an expression that brought a chill to the doctor's heart. They were Gay's eyes, yet—

"He's gone," she whispered. "He's never coming home—never, never again."

"No—no!" cried Simeon brokenly, "that ain't true, darlie."

"Hush!" warned the doctor. He knelt down, and softly stroked her hand. "Gay," he said gently, "listen to me. Nick's safe. He'll be here in a day or two. You misunderstand."

She struggled wildly up. "Don't lie to me! Don't—don't! Didn't I see the message? It was addressed . . . Oh, why do you try to deceive me? He's gone—drowned—my Nick! There's no more of him in those waters. I know. Haven't I thought of it nights when I couldn't sleep? Haven't I seen him—his hair all wet . . ."

She sank back, blessedly unconscious again.

Six hours later her little girl was born.

CHAPTER XXVII.

Strangely, the only member of the party who felt any regret at leaving their island refuge, was Angela. In the hours when Nick was absent from camp, building his signal fire, she had made elaborate plans for his conquest. Always optimistic regarding the power of her own charms, she reached the conclusion that it was absurd to consider as a rival, a wife who was thousands of miles away. Given her few weeks more and Nick Hastings would put his arms about her because he wished to. It would not be necessary to simulate a fall, as she had done that night about the Sea Bird. But something must be done to prevent him from starting out in the next boat. Perhaps she could arrange it by suggesting to Amy Myer that, because of his dependent family, it was Nick's duty to stay in the next place. She might give Amy a hint about the coming baby, telling her that it was Gay's wish for Nick not to know, and thereby gain an ally when he came to decide who should leave, and who should stay behind.

She might even manage so that Colonel Nowell, whose repeated tales of Painter's Neck made her shudder, should be the one to go. He was no longer young, and had no family to care whether he came back or not. With the complacency of a woman who always manages, by fair means or foul, to get her own way, Angela set her plan. When only a few hours later, she beheld the light of the approaching vessel, her emotions were a strange mingling of relief and anger; but when she realized who was their liberator she was seized with a rage that drove the color from her face, and it was with difficulty that she controlled herself sufficiently to surrender to the embrace her husband offered.

Nick had hardly spoken to her since they embarked. He had spent much time tramping the deck with Halliday, or reading and re-reading the letter that Halliday had brought. Perhaps, had Angela seen that letter, even her warped spirit would have understood why Nick had been so unyielding to her charms. Gay had said that the writing of it "eased her heart"; and the reading of it eased Nick's of a burden that had been weighing unbearably on his mind. Eagerly, and often, as one who has suffered thirst, Gay understood—she always would understand.

So while Nick exulted, Angela was feeling ill-used and irritated. They were, she knew, headed straight for Florida, where they would drop Nick at Miami. He would go home by rail while the rest of them were to proceed leisurely to Boston and deliver the yacht to its owner, who had gone North.

In chagrin at her frustrated plans, Angela forgot that she abominated camping, and felt vaguely aggrieved that her husband should have found them so soon. It gave her a personal grudge against him, which ripened as he continued to treat her with what she chose to call an unnatural courtesy and consideration.

"He has as axe of some sort to grind," she mused, as she looked moodily out to sea. "He hasn't smiled once, or said anything sarcastic. Nor has he talked about the wretched child he's so wrapped up in, though I heard him telling Nick some wonderful thing she'd said. He acts as foolish as a young father, and I believe he encourages her to call him Daddy! Well, if she tries that stunt with me, I'll put her in her proper place! And if he adopts her legally . . ."

Thoughts such as these were fuel to Angela's smoldering anger at the fate which seemed to have snatched Nick from her hands. And that fate was Halliday. She longed to punish him. She would punish him for the chance came. And she would punish Nick Hastings, too, for his lot in life. If she could punish them both—at one stroke! Her eyes brightened malevolently. Why, she could! It would be the easiest thing in the world if the opportunity arose . . .

It was a warm and balmy afternoon. Amy Myer was playing checkers with her little girl, and Angela had gone to the other side of the boat, where she was gazing into the water, still wondering if the shade of blue would be becoming for a new evening gown. After a few moments the Colonel joined her. Deep in her plans for a new gown, Angela smiled absently, and this encouraged her began on one of his reminiscences. This reminds me of the last cruise I ever took," he said absently. "Started from Bar Harbor—"

Angela started, undecided, wishing that Colonel Nowell had never heard of the state of Maine. Probably his cruise would end at Painter's Neck. He was forever going to Painter's Neck by steam, by automobile, or by water. It was with relief that she saw Nick and her husband coming toward them. She interrupted the Colonel's narrative to greet them with unusual graciousness; but Colonel Nowell once started, was not to be side-tracked.

"Just telling your wife about the first cruise I ever took," he resumed tirelessly. "You familiar with Maine, Halliday? Great state. Finest coast in the world. I had heard of a place called Painter's Neck?"

It seemed to Nick that for a perceptible moment Halliday hesitated; then, moving nearer to Angela, he said quietly: "Yes, I know the place."

"Really?" The Colonel appeared a bit surprised. "Went there before your marriage, I suppose."

Angela cast a frightened glance at her husband; but he said casually: "No. I was a house for one summer. This is a wonderful day to be on the water, isn't it? But after all, I think I prefer the mountains. Ever been to the White Mountains, Colonel?"

"Why—er—yes," came feebly from Colonel Nowell. For once he seemed to grope for words. His eyes sought Nick's inquiringly, but did not meet them because Nick was intent on Angela's hands, clutching the rail so tightly that the veins stood out, so harsh, unlovely lines. Then Halliday moved closer, laying one of his hands on her, protectively.

"Let's sit down," he suggested, and seating his wife courteously took the chair beside her.

The Colonel tried once more to meet Nick's gaze, and failing, said, with a return of his old, jaunty manner: "Well, guess I'll go round the other way and get a nap. This air makes me sleepy. See you later, folks."

Keeping the Sea Clean

Britain Considering Bill To Prevent Oil Discharge From Ships

The House of Commons gave first reading to a bill, introduced by Sir Cooper Dawson, Cons., Brighton, designed to keep the seas clean. The bill would require oil-carrying ships to free their liquid discharge from oil.

Sir Cooper estimates that 2,000,000 tons of crude oil were discharged from oil ships in the sea every day. This oil drifted to coasts, damaging fisheries and despoiling sea resorts.

"If Britannia cannot rule the waves, that's no reason why we shouldn't keep them clean," he said, as members cheered the bill on its way.

Free Lectures On Health Subjects Given By Canadian Social Hygiene Council

The Canadian Social Hygiene Council's Free Radio College of Health has just concluded its third annual term. It is the only college of the other—unlike also because it has no murmur, buildings nor books, no fees, degrees or examinations and only one subject—health.

This term, thousands of Canadians on farms, and in villages, towns and cities from coast to coast have heard the voices of lecturers telling them how to prevent diphtheria, typhoid fever, how to beware the early signs of cancer and how to seek health through nature's greatest medicine—sunlight.

Thirty lectures in all have been given and the entire course has been as free as the ether that carried its messages. Sixteen radio stations and scores of daily and weekly newspapers have given free time and free space to the lectures and these were provided free by the Canadian Social Hygiene Council. The result has been a "college" with an unprecedentedly low running cost, its only endowment good-will, its lecture-halls the homes of the Canadian public. The response of this vast, invisible class is attested by letters from every corner of Canada. Lectures were delivered in French and English.

The importance of pure milk, the saving of child life through proper care and feedings, mental hygiene, prevention and cure of tuberculosis, the need for regular physical examinations, these and other subjects close to the life of the average Canadian, were dealt with.

THE RHYMING OPTIMIST

THE SEEKER

He is a seeker, let him go
Still seeking what he does not know,
A prey to hungers and despairs,
As up and down the world he fares
A flame keeps burning in his breast
That will not give him peace or rest.

He is a seeker and he finds
In every path that turns and winds
A hint, a glimmering, a trace
Of that which flows from his embrace,
Of that which makes life dear alone,
The joy supreme, the joy unknown.

He is a seeker . . . unpossessed
Always the object of his quest;
His goal ungrasped, his dream denied,
Yet joy goes ever by his side,
For only one who seeks the light
Of some white star across the night,
Some glow from other realms than this
Can know the utmost heights of bliss.

The Woman Motorist

Practice Making Her As Perfect Driver As A Man

The proof of the pudding is in the eating. The old glib against the woman motorist are dying before our eyes for the mere reason that the number of women drivers is increasing at so astonishing a rate. There is not much more sense in saying that women are congenitally incapable of driving a motor car than in arguing that men are debared by their sex from learning to knit or to sew if they wish to do so. It is a matter of practice making perfect in both cases. And in the case of the vast majority of women motorists practice is making as nearly perfect as the average male driver at any rate.

—Mrs. G. P.

When your gastric or digestive juices refuse to flow, your food, instead of becoming absorbed into your system, simply collects and ferments inside you, producing harmful acids and gases which give rise to biliousness, heartburn and flatulence.

Kruschen is a combination of six mineral salts, which goes right to the root of the trouble. It first stimulates the flow of gastric and other juices to aid digestion, and then ensures complete, regular and unimpeded elimination of waste matter every day. And that means a blessed end to biliousness, and a renewed and whole-hearted enjoyment of your food without the slightest fear of having to pay the old painful penalty.

Ottawa Gov't's Guarantee to the Wheat Pools.

As a result of the conference at Ottawa last week between the representatives of the western provinces and the Federal Cabinet ministers, it is understood the Ottawa government is prepared to guarantee the pools up to 30c a bu., but at the same time carry through the project of a western inter-provincial trading corporation.

The pool elevators will operate in connection with this but the pool staff will be separate. It is the understanding that farmers, under the contract to the pools are released from such contracts. Two courses are now open to them.

1. They may pool their grain, receive an advance up to 30 cents a bushel and take a chance with obtaining more if the market improves, or

2. They may sell, outright, through the trading corporation and be paid in full the prevailing market price tho' should any profit be made its distribution will be pro rata.

The western representatives sought a larger guarantee than is offered but 30 cents was understood to be the maximum figure the government is prepared to concede.

The alternative presented to farmers of continuing to pool their wheat or to utilize the trading facilities of the proposed corporation may have considerable effect on the pools as at present constituted. In regard to the trading organization, the government is prepared to assume any losses from its operation but a profit is expected.

This action was taken at the request of the Attorney General and by consent of the parties involved.

Summer is the season in which the camper and tourist hold sway thru the land. It is also the time of year when canned goods are in demand. Sun Letter Box.

The Editor is not responsible for opinions expressed by the correspondents.

EDITOR SUN: Just a few lines' space to write of a subject which I consider of importance at the present time. In scanning the papers of late I noticed several dispatches stating the fact of barns destroyed by fire. This in the section of the province to the south of us, where the haying season commences at an earlier date. What I really wish to mention is the great risk incurred in the placing of partly-cured hay in lofts of buildings where are stored other articles, and at times stock.

I suggest that a general warning on this matter should be given farmers in this and nearby districts concerning this matter—particularly this year when without a doubt in numerous cases may only partly cured will be put in the mow, with an almost certainty that spontaneous combustion will ensue and set afire the structure where it is stored. By drawing the attention of farmers to this matter I would deem it a great service. Again thanking you for the courtesy of your columns, I remain, yours,
